Some additional resources available that offer helpful tutorials are www.dummies.com/how-to/design/photoshop and www.adobe.com/uk/photoshop. Creating layers One of Photoshop's basic concepts is the layer. A layer is something that you add to an image to which you can apply different styles, effects, and adjustments. You can also apply color-keyed masks to the layer for creating a true mask of a particular part of the image. Photoshop organizes layers into groups and lists them as such in the Layers panel. Creating new images The most common method that people use to get started is to open an existing photo they have and edit it, a process called retouching. You can see a tutorial on retouching in Chapter 15. The principle behind opening an existing image in Photoshop is to choose the appropriate image format, as explained in Chapter 9. The next step is to open the image by choosing File⇒Open. You can then save the image in the format that you want to use, for example, JPEG, PSD, or TIF. It's important to note that if you open the image in Photoshop, you lose ownership of that image and therefore can no longer reuse or edit the image. In fact, you can never again use the image at all if you continue using it. It should be noted that saving the image from the camera is not the same as opening the file in Photoshop. When you save the image, you have the choice of leaving the original file or overwriting it with the new file. Editing a photo Photoshop can be used for a multitude of tasks when it comes to editing an image. You can even apply multiple adjustments to the image in order to achieve a certain result. For example, you can adjust the color of the image in order to achieve a certain look. This can be accomplished in a number of ways — from using the Color panel and adjusting with color stops to using the Adjustment panel and applying adjustments. Color adjustment When you open a photo in Photoshop, you have the option of using the Color panel (see Figure 6-2). The Color panel enables you to adjust the colors of an image by moving the color stops. You can also use the panel to add a new color stop by clicking it and adjusting its sliders. The sliders can be used to adjust the color of the image, as well as to

An audit of surgical excision margins in patients with stage I non-small cell lung cancer in the era of computed tomography. Computed tomography (CT) has improved the diagnosis of pulmonary nodules and non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC), but is not widely used for staging of lung cancer. There is little published information on the performance of surgical margins in NSCLC patients who present with stage I disease at staging thoracotomy. In order to better understand these observations, a retrospective analysis was conducted. Twenty-seven consecutive patients (mean age, 60.9 +/- 11.2 years) with resectable stage I NSCLC were identified. Median survival time from the time of diagnosis was 48.3 months (range, 4.6-146.7 months). All patients underwent thoracotomy with pulmonary resection and systematic mediastinal node dissection. The median tumor size for the cohort was 2.9 cm (range, 0.8-5.0 cm). Twenty patients had a lobectomy and six a pneumonectomy. Median preoperative tumor size was 1.75 cm (range, 0.8-4.0 cm), which was not significantly correlated with local control or survival. Tumor diameter 1.5 cm or less was associated with improved survival ($P = 0.002$). No patient with a lesion of 1.5 cm or less experienced recurrence. Patients with positive margins had worse survival times and local control. The median survival time for this subgroup was 16 months (range, 3.2-78.5 months), compared with 67.4 months (range, 19.4-146.7 months) for patients with negative margins ($P = 0.032$). Most patients in this cohort presented with stage I NSCLC, were treated with pulmonary resection and mediastinal node dissection, and were eligible for and indeed had adjuvant therapy. Positive resection margins were associated with worse survival, suggesting that NSCLC lesions of diameter 1.5 cm or less may be difficult to completely resect. This study emphasizes the importance of mediastinal staging and complete pathologic evaluation of resected specimens.
