PDF Copy Paste Screenshots: Nice job. I'm surprised that few people realize just how many real advantages OS/2 (and later OS/X) offered over its competitors. I wish I had known them all when I worked at IBM, and had some more to list. It just keeps getting better. It's not like this happens very often, but today I found a bug in the copy text function. In my test, it sometimes chose the wrong address (or none at all) and pasted the actual page itself. It was impossible to "move" the text after that happened. It seems like it might be a programming error, or a security bug, but I haven't found anything about that yet, except that there was one place where the 1st letter of a word was pasted on the last page, instead of the beginning. That, and you can't scroll backwards after that page (which you do after hitting the middle mouse button). b7e8fdf5c8
